Customer Reviews

Christian homeschoolers often ask me whether I think kids should learn to type. The answer is absolutely. So I was interested to see a book that is tailored just for Christian students. Christians will agree with me that a saturation experience in the Word is a great thing. Leanne Beitel's book extends that principle to the exercises a student copies while learning to type. The book, which is high-school-level reading, teaches individual keystrokes, home keys and so on in the usual fashion, and then turns to the Psalms for typing practice. This book covers not only learning to type, but how to set margins and so on in a word processor. It's also a business class, teaching the kids how to create a business letter, how to follow stylesheets such as MLA and APA, how to create a bibliography, how to format envelopes, and how to read proofreaders' marks. The typing exercises Bible excerpts, an uplifting story about an early Christian, and some evangelical material. This book can be a welcome addition to your Christian home school.

Very pleased with the textbook. It's simple enough for younger children but also works with teens and adults.

I like this book and so does my daughter. It is simple to read and follow!
